I. Introduction

1. Nearly sixty years after the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees was established by the General Assembly in December 1950, forced population displacement remains a major global issue. It has grown in magnitude and complexity. Today's global megatrends — including population growth, urbanization, food and energy insecurity, water scarcity and, particularly, climate change — are interacting with traditional drivers, such as conflict and violence, to create new forms of displacement.

2. At the same time, the space in which UNHCR and other humanitarian actors operate continues to diminish. Humanitarian organizations have been denied access to affected populations and expelled from operational areas, assistance has been diverted or manipulated, and aid workers increasingly put at risk. In one six-month period during 2009, UNHCR lost three staff members in separate attacks in a single operation. In light of these events, UNHCR re-examined the security situation in key operations and undertook a range of measures to minimize security risks in the Field. In parallel to shrinking humanitarian space in developing regions, there is increased pressure on the asylum space available in the world's more prosperous States, including a surge in refoulement during the reporting period.

3. Over the past year, ongoing conflicts in many countries caused significant internal and cross-border displacement. Indiscriminate violence, the deliberate targeting of civilians, and disregard for basic human rights remained widespread in various parts of the world. Major conflicts such as those in Afghanistan and Somalia showed no signs of being resolved; while conflicts which had appeared to have ended, or to be on the way to doing so, experienced setbacks. As a result, the number of people returning home voluntarily in 2009 was the lowest in twenty years.

4. While mature conflicts failed to resolve, new and renewed conflict situations emerged during the reporting period. During the first half of 2009, tensions in the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province and the Federally Administered Tribal Areas of Pakistan caused massive internal population displacement. In Yemen, renewed tensions in the north led to fighting that displaced an estimated 250,000 persons. In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, even as refugees were repatriating in significant numbers from Zambia to Katanga Province, in September 2009 armed conflict erupted in Equateur Province, adding to the ongoing displacement in eastern areas of the country. In June 2010, violence in and around Osh and other cities in southern Kyrgyzstan led to the displacement of an estimated 350,000 people internally, plus another 100,000 who briefly took refuge in neighbouring Uzbekistan.

5. In response to this increasingly challenging environment, two basic objectives guide the work of the Office going forward: strengthening protection capacity in response to the threats to humanitarian and asylum space, and enhancing the organization's emergency preparedness and response capability. UNHCR continues to consolidate the progress made through its internal reform process, to reinforce its orientation to results-based management and to ensure that the maximum available resources are dedicated to the people it cares for.

II. Focus and objectives of the report

6. This report provides an account of the work carried out by the Office between January 2009 and mid-2010 on behalf of over 36.5 million people (hereafter referred to as “persons or populations of concern”). It looks at major developments and challenges with respect to the protection, assistance and search for durable solutions for refugees, internally displaced persons (IDPs), stateless persons, and others of concern; the consolidation of the Office’s internal reform process; continued efforts to tackle protracted refugee situations; and an overview of some of UNHCR’s global priorities. Partnerships and coordination of action with other concerned entities, both within and outside of the United Nations system, are also examined. More detailed information, including on regional and country operations, is available in UNHCR’s Global Report 2009 as well as in the various governance reports presented to the Executive Committee of the High Commissioner’s Programme and its Standing Committee. These reports are available at: www.unhcr.org.

III. Populations of concern

7. Table 1 at the end of this report presents the populations of concern at the end of 2009. For more detailed statistical information, please refer to UNHCR’s 2009 Global Trends: Refugees, Asylum-seekers, Returnees, Internally Displaced and Stateless Persons, published on 15 June 2010 and available at: www.unhcr.org/statistics.

8. At the end of 2009, there were 36.5 million people of concern to UNHCR, including some 10.4 million refugees. The number of people displaced within their own country as a result of conflict reached an estimated 27.1 million, with an unprecedented 15.6 million of them benefiting from UNHCR protection and assistance. The latter constitutes an increase of more than 1.2 million compared to the previous year (14.4 million). The number of stateless persons identified by UNHCR remained at 6.6 million, although the actual number is estimated to be closer to 12 million.

9. Humanitarian crises and the prevailing political situation in a number of countries not only uprooted millions, but also prevented the return of refugees and IDPs. The number of returned refugees (251,000) has steadily decreased since 2004, with 2009 being the lowest level in two decades. In contrast, the number of returned IDPs (2.2 million) was the highest in more than a decade.

10. During 2009, more than 922,000 individual claims for asylum or refugee status were submitted to Governments or UNHCR offices in 159 countries or territories, representing a 5 per cent increase compared to the previous year (875,300) and the third consecutive annual rise. This was partly the result of a persistently high number of asylum applications in South Africa. The majority of asylum applications came from asylum-seekers originating from Afghanistan, Colombia, Ethiopia, Myanmar and Zimbabwe.

IV. UNHCR reform

11. The internal reforms launched by the High Commissioner four years ago have continued to pay dividends. With essentially the same number of staff worldwide, but 30 per cent fewer at Headquarters in Geneva, UNHCR has increased its activities by more than 60 per cent since 2006. This has allowed the Office to dedicate more resources to the people it cares for, including significantly enhanced efforts to promote solutions and address critical gaps in protection and assistance, notably in the areas of sexual and gender-based violence, HIV/AIDS, malaria, malnutrition, reproductive health, and water and sanitation.

12. In last year's report (A/64/12), preliminary results of the reform process showed a reduction in staff and headquarters costs as a percentage of total expenditure; and an increase in the part of the budget managed by partners, both governmental and non-governmental. In 2009, these trends were confirmed.

Operations, staff and ABOD costs as a percentage of total costs (2000 to 2009)

13. As shown in the chart above, in 2009, staffing costs went down to 28 per cent of total costs. At the same time, headquarters costs were again reduced, down to 9.5 per cent of total costs as represented in chart B below. The percentage of expenditure managed through implementing partners has increased to 35.9 per cent — reflecting a significant improvement in the expertise and flexibility that UNHCR is able to mobilize.

14. The year 2010 marks a turning point in the reform efforts. As the Office has now reached an acceptable level of cost-effectiveness in its performance, the aim is to maintain this now as the reform moves into the consolidation phase. UNHCR's overall objective in pursuing these reform measures has been to devote an ever-higher percentage of its funding to the benefit of populations of concern. Henceforth, particular emphasis will be placed on improving the delivery of protection and emergency response.

15. Gearing up to implement results-based management, all UNHCR offices began planning their operations using the new management support software Focus. This software was designed to enable UNHCR to plan, budget and report its programmes according to a results framework. The roll-out of Focus complements the introduction of a new budget structure, organized across four pillars, which was developed on the basis of a global/comprehensive needs assessment outlining the full range of UNHCR's budgetary requirements. The Biennial Programme Budget 2010-2011 approved by the Executive Committee in October 2009 represents the beginning of the first full planning cycle under the new budget structure.

16. As with any new system, however, this process has not been without hitches. The fundamental challenge now is to solve technical problems with the implementation of Focus and ensure a smooth interface between this new results-based management software and the previously introduced MSRP software system which underpins the Office's financial and human resources management.

17. In 2009, the Office continued to implement the Headquarters Review. The Division for Programme Support and Management has integrated the programme management, analysis and support functions of the Office to enhance the quality of operations, and the Division of Emergency, Security and Supply now encompasses emergency preparedness and response, supply and procurement, and staff and beneficiary security. Since October, the Division of International Protection has been restructured into three pillars covering legal and protection policy, operational support to protection activities, and comprehensive solutions. Currently, the Division of Information Services and Technology is being reorganized to decentralize technical support from Geneva to six regional platforms. The next steps will include remaining aspects of human resources management reform, notably promotions, recruitment and contracts.

18. In the area of human resources, a new policy and procedures for assignments of international staff have been issued, with the goal of ensuring that the Office has the right staff in the right jobs at the right time. Guidelines aimed at systematizing the use of additional workforce personnel were also developed in conjunction with the United Nations Volunteers programme, the UN Office for Project Services (UNOPS), and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) with which the Office has standby arrangements.

19. Following a six-month trial period, UNHCR refined its Global Management Accountability Framework (GMAF). The GMAF maps accountabilities, responsibilities and authority throughout the organization and links performance and staff development more concretely to a culture of accountability.

V. Protection and operations

A. Overview

20. Insecurity, continuing human rights violations by State and non-State actors and weak State structures — often compounded by dire social conditions, and food, water and economic crises — complicate protection responses and solutions to displacement. In addition, a spate of involuntary returns in 2009, notably in the Mediterranean, the Great Lakes region, the Horn of Africa, and south-east Asia, reflected the increasingly hostile environment for refugees and asylum-seekers. As a result, UNHCR had to intensify efforts to narrow the gap between law and practice in the area of refugee protection, and find new creative approaches to assist displaced populations around the world.

21. The number of refugees in sub-Saharan Africa continued to decline for the ninth consecutive year, although less so than in previous years. Major displacement generated by ongoing conflicts continued in the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Somalia and Sudan. In the first half of 2010 alone, escalating violence in southern and central Somalia forced an estimated 200,000 persons into displacement, the majority within their own country. On a positive note, UNHCR began to review the situation of refugees from Angola, Burundi, Liberia and Rwanda with a view to bringing closure to these chapters of displacement. The Office is promoting comprehensive solutions strategies in each case, as well as setting out a roadmap for considering the possible cessation of refugee status while establishing safeguards for those who still need international protection. UNHCR also provided technical expertise and financial support in relation to the adoption of the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa, the only binding treaty with continental scope to address IDP protection and assistance issues.

22. In the Middle East and North Africa region, the organized repatriation of Mauritanian refugees from Senegal came to an end in December 2009. During the latter half of 2009, UNHCR was able to secure, in principle, agreement for the expansion of the Confidence Building Measures programme for Western Sahara, which would entail the use of road transport for family visits. Despite a relative decrease in violence in the previous period, the security situation in Iraq deteriorated ahead of the March 2010 elections, affecting the ability of many displaced Iraqis to return home. With the support of neighbouring host countries, UNHCR helped provide food, medical interventions and financial assistance for Iraqi refugees. In Yemen, the humanitarian crisis continued to deepen, more than doubling the number of persons displaced internally since the last reporting period. In addition to the estimated 250,000 IDPs, some of whom had been displaced since 2004 when the country's internal conflict first erupted, Yemen continued to receive refugees from Somalia.

23. In Latin America, Colombia and its neighbours continued to experience an elevated rate of new displacement. In Colombia, UNHCR and the Government agreed on a plan for 2010-2011 that builds upon the State's efforts to protect, assist and find solutions for displaced persons. In Ecuador, an innovative registration initiative supported by UNHCR resulted in the provision of identity documents to 26,000 Colombians, and the subsequent granting of refugee status by the host Government. Mobile teams, comprised of government officials from Ecuador and UNHCR staff, traversed difficult terrain to reach the population in an isolated region in the north of the country. Following the devastating earthquake that hit Haiti in January 2010, the Office — in support of the broader United Nations response — mobilized protection and technical staff to assist with the relief efforts, and established a presence in the Dominican Republic to respond to the influx of Haitians following the disaster. Elsewhere in the world, support offered in the past in response to natural disasters has facilitated and strengthened relations with Governments on refugee matters or provided an entry point for more involvement with populations displaced by conflict.

24. In Europe, where approximately 80 per cent of all asylum requests in the industrialized world are lodged, applicants from Afghanistan, Iraq and Somalia made up the largest groups. While the challenges to asylum space grew, there were some encouraging developments, including preparations to establish a European Asylum Support Office in which UNHCR has been involved. In south-eastern Europe, UNHCR played particular attention to helping the countries of the former Yugoslavia address outstanding displacement issues and work towards consolidating comprehensive solutions. In Georgia, UNHCR continued to implement critical assistance programmes for internally displaced persons but is shifting its focus with a view to gradually handing over these programmes to development actors.

25. In Asia, the situation remained volatile in Afghanistan. In Pakistan's Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa province and the Federally Administered Tribal Areas, insecurity continued throughout much of the reporting period. UNHCR provided assistance to many of the estimated 2 million people displaced in these areas, and assisted with the return of nearly 150,000 Afghan refugees from Pakistan and the Islamic Republic of Iran. In Sri Lanka, the Office called for a protection-sensitive approach to voluntary return, and assisted the Government with demining and the provision of material assistance for those wishing to return. In Central Asia, clashes in and around Osh in southern Kyrgyzstan during the first half of 2010, led to the displacement of an estimated 350,000 people inside the country; a further 100,000 fled across the border into Uzbekistan. UNHCR rushed hundreds of tonnes of emergency relief into the two countries in a series of massive air shipments from its stockpile in Dubai, and sent in emergency teams to assist with the emergency. One of the greatest challenges across the region, is the growing number of refugees and asylum-seekers in urban areas.

26. Globally, the number of refugees residing in urban areas continued to grow, and millions more who have fled their homes due to conflict but who are internally displaced, are also living in urban areas. In September 2009, UNHCR issued a new urban refugee policy which provides guidance to the Field on handling the specific challenges encountered in urban settings. The 2009 High Commissioner's Dialogue emphasized the importance of strong and innovative partnerships in such a context, including at the local level. Subsequently, seven "pilot sites" were selected for monitoring during the course of 2010, in order to look at the implementation of the urban refugee policy, examine the challenges encountered, and identify good practices that may be replicated elsewhere.

27. A central component of the Office's efforts to safeguard the rights and well-being of all persons of concern is UNHCR's age, gender and diversity mainstreaming approach (AGDM), developed in 2004. In 2009, an evaluation of the AGDM strategy led the Office to introduce new measures designed to strengthen accountability for AGDM, including by expanding staff and partners' capacity and prioritizing AGDM efforts in terms of resource allocation. The evaluation noted fundamental changes in the way UNHCR staff now operate in promoting gender equality, taking into consideration vulnerable groups and contributing to a better understanding of the protection dimensions of assistance.

B. Refugee protection in the context of international migration

28. Reflecting a growing determination to uphold traditional notions of State sovereignty, 2009 was characterized by greater restrictions and fewer rights, with a clear trend towards introducing laws to deter and criminalize asylum-seekers who arrived irregularly or overstayed their visas. While recognizing the legitimate interest of States to manage immigration and control the entry, stay and removal of migrants, UNHCR continues to stress the need for mechanisms that are responsive to those seeking international protection, including alternatives to detention. The Office continued to work with States to ensure that the proper mechanisms are in place at borders, so that persons seeking protection have access to territory and asylum procedures. In June 2009, UNHCR released a compilation of practical examples from 55 countries on how activities inspired by the 10-Point Plan of Action to address mixed migratory movements have been successfully implemented. The Office also issued a Strategy Note on Combating Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, in the asylum context.

29. The movement of unaccompanied and separated children across borders is a worrying trend, often involving detention and a lack of access to asylum procedures and proper reception facilities. In Europe, the overall number of unaccompanied and separated children claiming asylum increased slightly in 2009, to an estimated 15,000, with some 40 per cent from Afghanistan alone. Responding to the scope and complexity of the situation of unaccompanied and separated children in mixed migration flows necessitates inter-agency cooperation and partnerships with Governments in countries of origin, transit and destination. In this connection, UNHCR, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the International Organization for Migration (IOM) have established a working group to enhance responses to child protection challenges in mixed migration.

30. UNHCR worked to ensure that trafficked persons who wished to seek asylum were properly identified, cared for and assured of access to the appropriate procedures. The Office was actively involved in advocacy activities in a number of regions to ensure that national anti-trafficking laws and policies were protection-sensitive. At the end of 2009, UNHCR and IOM finalized and distributed Joint Framework Standard Operating Procedures on the identification and protection of trafficked persons.

31. UNHCR continued its efforts to protect asylum-seekers and refugees at sea. There were numerous instances of interceptions on the high seas of persons who were potentially seeking asylum, including women and children, where no proper examination of their protection needs was undertaken. "Push-backs" to unsafe countries which are not signatories to the 1951 Refugee Convention were of serious concern. In response, UNHCR worked to increase its cooperation with key actors, including the European Union, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) maritime forces, and relevant authorities, regarding procedures for handling persons intercepted or rescued at sea and the need to put in place necessary safeguards.

C. States parties to the 1951 Convention relating to the status of refugees (and/or its 1967 Protocol), the 1954 Convention relating to the status of stateless persons, and the 1961 Convention on the reduction of statelessness

32. The number of States parties to the 1951 Convention relating to the status of refugees remained at 144, while the number of States parties to the 1967 Protocol increased to 145, with ratification by Monaco during the first half of 2010. The total number of States parties to one or both of these instruments remained at 147 during the reporting period.

33. The number of States parties to the 1954 Convention relating to the status of stateless persons (the 1954 Convention) and the 1961 Convention on the reduction of statelessness (the 1961 Convention), two key instruments for the protection of stateless people and the prevention and reduction of statelessness, remained limited. In 2009, two States¹ acceded to the 1961 Convention and two acceded to the 1954 Convention. By the end of June 2010, the total number of States parties to the 1954 Convention increased to 65, while 37 States were party to the 1961 Convention. Increasing the numbers of States parties to these conventions remained a key objective of the Office. Efforts to promote accessions will be stepped up in the context of the 50th anniversary of the 1961 Convention.

¹ Liechtenstein acceded to both Statelessness Conventions in September 2009, while Hungary acceded to the 1961 Convention in May 2009, and Malawi acceded to the 1954 Convention in October 2009.

D. Identification, prevention and reduction of statelessness and the protection of stateless persons

34. Many stateless people around the globe continued to face challenges in exercising their human rights, including obtaining identity documents, registering their children and accessing public services. In March 2010, UNHCR published a strategy note entitled “UNHCR Action to address statelessness”. The note provides a framework of action, including guidance and suggested activities that can be undertaken in the Field, for use by UNHCR staff and partners, including United Nations agencies, non-governmental organizations, Governments, civil society, and regional organizations.

35. UNHCR continued to make strategic use of its limited resources and a growing range of partnerships to ensure that States take the necessary steps to address the statelessness issue in accordance with international standards and best practice. For example, a joint UNHCR and UNICEF project in Georgia assisted individuals with registration and documentation. With support from the European Union, UNHCR implemented an ambitious project in south-eastern Europe to ensure access to civil documentation for Roma populations. A regional conference in Turkmenistan, co-hosted by the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE), allowed Governments to share best practices and discuss obstacles to the eradication of statelessness in the region. Mapping of people who were, or were at risk of becoming, stateless, awareness raising and capacity building were at the centre of UNHCR’s activities in countries such as Côte d’Ivoire, Djibouti, Ethiopia and Kenya, as well as in the Gulf region; while in Iraq, Nepal, and Ukraine, UNHCR assisted people in acquiring or confirming nationality. In Sudan, in a move to prevent statelessness as a possible result of the referendum on the independence of Southern Sudan in 2011, the Office has embarked on several activities, including a review of the legal framework, promotion of access to the Statelessness Conventions, training of government officials and ensuring that affected populations have documentation.

36. Major progress was achieved by the Russian Federation in reducing statelessness and, prior to events which unfolded during the first half of 2010, efforts were also being made in Kyrgyzstan. A number of States took positive steps to improve national legislation in order to ensure the right to a nationality and avoid statelessness. For example, Bangladesh and Zimbabwe introduced reforms recognizing the right of women to confer nationality on their children on an equal basis with men. Viet Nam introduced revised legislation, paving the way for easier naturalization of stateless persons and for the reacquisition of nationality by former citizens, including those who became stateless when they failed to acquire another nationality through naturalization.

E. Emergency preparedness and response

37. In July 2009, UNHCR established the Division of Emergency, Security and Supply (DESS) with the aim of maximizing the key strategic linkages between emergency preparedness and response, supply management, and security for staff and persons of concern. Following review of the Office’s emergency preparedness and response capacity in 2009, DESS developed an Emergency Preparedness Plan of Action for 2010-2011, aimed at strengthening protection in all aspects of emergency management; applying a lessons-learned/best practice approach through the evaluation of emergency operations; improving preparedness activities such as early-warning, situational analysis and contingency planning; and strengthening internal and external capacity through training. Partnerships with governmental and non-governmental entities remain an essential component of UNHCR's overall response capacity. UNHCR is also working to ensure that staff members have the right skills and profiles needed to work in complex, high-risk field operations. To provide a more robust, yet flexible, capacity to provide life-saving assistance, UNHCR introduced a Global Stockpile Management system and has taken steps to improve its financial procedures to facilitate a response for up to 500,000 persons of concern within 72 hours.

38. In terms of inter-agency coordination, UNHCR is participating in a joint effort, supported by the European Union, to develop a new version of the Humanitarian Early Warning System, for conflict-generated emergencies. The Office has also continued to participate in the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC) and its sub-working group on preparedness, including through the UNHCR eCentre located in Tokyo.

F. Safety and security of staff and populations of concern

39. In 2009, UNHCR comprehensively examined and strengthened its system of security management and the way in which it assures the safety and security of staff, operations and persons of concern. This internal review coincided with the completion of a first-ever audit of security governance, undertaken from March to June 2009, by the United Nations Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS).

40. Both the internal review and the OIOS audit took place against a backdrop of increased threats to the United Nations and especially humanitarian workers. Agencies, Funds and Programmes have been at particular risk in countries where the United Nations is perceived as being associated with a particular political agenda — a trend confirmed by fatal attacks on the United Nations in Algiers (December 2007), Hargeisa (October 2008), and Kabul and Islamabad (October 2009). Another indicator of this trend was related to the number of aid workers kidnapped globally, a figure that was 350 per cent higher in the period 2006-2008 than in the period 2003-2005.²

41. Based on the internal review and the OIOS audit, UNHCR has undertaken a number of initiatives aimed at enhancing security management throughout the organization. These include a strengthened Field Safety Section in the newly created Division of Emergency, Security and Supply; better support to staff and managers in the Field; a more systematic approach to the provision of physical security for persons of concern, in conjunction with the Division of International Protection; the identification and hiring of qualified field safety advisors; enhanced security analysis with an emphasis on helping decision-makers judge threats, risks and vulnerabilities more accurately; and multiplied opportunities for security specialists, managers and staff to undergo adapted and specialized security training.

² Overseas Development Institute, Humanitarian Policy Group, Policy Brief 34, Providing aid in insecure environments: 2009 update, April 2009.

42. In addition, a high-level Security Steering Committee under the chairmanship of the High Commissioner was instituted in mid-2009 to conduct regular reviews of high-risk operations in critical locations. These measures are aimed at supporting UNHCR's approach to security, as a means of enabling persons of concern to access the protection and assistance they deserve.

G. Assuring basic needs and essential services

43. One of UNHCR's Global Strategic Priorities remains to satisfy basic needs and assure essential services for persons of concern. This includes food security and nutrition; basic domestic and hygiene items; water and sanitation; primary health care; prevention and treatment of HIV and AIDS; education; and services for groups with special needs.

44. The year 2009 was a devastating one for the world's hungry, and refugees and IDPs, many of whom live in remote areas with limited access to fertile land or livelihood activities, continued to be among the hardest hit. UNHCR worked closely with WFP in this area (see Chapter VII on partnerships and coordination). In 2009, the project for anaemia control and prevention was implemented in seven of the countries showing the highest prevalence of anaemia.

45. In 2009, UNHCR sought to ensure that refugees and other people of concern had access to health services similar to those available to local populations. Particular emphasis is being placed on integrating urban refugees into existing public health services. To address HIV and AIDS in line with its Strategic Plan for 2008-2012, UNHCR continued to advocate for access of people of concern to national HIV prevention and treatment programmes. By the end of 2009, approximately 87 per cent of refugees in need of antiretroviral treatment had access to it, and 75 per cent of pregnant women had access to prevention of mother-to-child transmission programmes.

46. On the basis of identified gaps, the Office established a three-year plan to improve existing water and sanitation services in 17 UNHCR operations. For instance, in Uganda in 2009, approximately 28,000 individuals of concern to UNHCR benefited from a 15 per cent increase in the water supply. Similar achievements were made in 2009 in the Dadaab refugee camps in Kenya, where new boreholes increased the water supply by 35 per cent for approximately 300,000 refugees in the camps. UNHCR also began a comprehensive mapping exercise to assess the needs and gaps in providing sanitary materials to all women of concern.

47. Access to education is still not widely available to refugees, with low rates of enrolment at both the primary and secondary levels. Though considerable progress has been achieved, there is still a need to improve school enrolment rates, in both camp and urban settings. In the camps in eastern Chad for example, only 370 out of over 16,000 children receive secondary education. UNHCR's new education strategy for 2010-2012 focuses on boosting its long-term capacity to support educational programmes as a means of strengthening protection. In 2009, operations in 11 countries began receiving technical support and assistance to improve enrolment and establish safe schools and learning environments. Cooperation with UNICEF and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) has also been reinforced through joint missions and activities in the Field. In terms of higher education, the Albert Einstein German Academic Refugee Initiative (DAFI) assisted more than 1,770 students in 34 countries with full or partial scholarships at the university level.

48. In line with its Environmental Guidelines, in 2009 UNHCR and partners worked to consistently introduce, apply and support a range of specific environmental management projects, approaches and tools. These included developing community environmental management plans in camps, such as in Chad, Ethiopia, Kenya, Rwanda, the United Republic of Tanzania and Uganda, as well as undertaking environmental impact assessments, notably in Bangladesh, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Kenya and Rwanda. The use of alternative energy, environmentally friendly shelters and green technologies was promoted, and reforestation projects were implemented. In addition, UNHCR organized environmental management training for staff, implementing partners and governmental counterparts in key locations.

49. The protection of older people of concern and those living with disabilities remained a priority for UNHCR in 2009. The Office initiated programmes targeting older persons in several countries including Georgia, Jordan, and Myanmar. In Ethiopia, Jordan, Kenya, the Syrian Arab Republic and Yemen targeted activities ensured the inclusion and participation of those living with disabilities in protection and programme delivery.

VI. Resolving protracted refugee situations and achieving durable solutions

50. In many countries, stalled or failed peace processes, continued security risks, including the presence of landmines, and a lack of basic services and livelihood opportunities, prevented refugees from returning to their homes. The Office continues to promote voluntary repatriation for some, and develop alternative solutions and measures to ensure the continued protection of those refugees unable to return home.

A. Protracted refugee situations

51. Some 5.5 million refugees were living in a protracted situation at the end of 2009. In an effort to alleviate the burdens on countries hosting large numbers of refugees for prolonged periods, UNHCR, together with Governments and the international community, worked to create space for development programmes, reduce dependency, and increase possibilities for self-sufficiency. In Bangladesh, for example, UNHCR completed a comprehensive profiling of all refugees in the camps to identify specific needs, as well as individual educational qualifications and skills, in order to better focus self-reliance opportunities and identify those in need of resettlement. While voluntary repatriation remains the preferred solution for Afghans in the Islamic Republic of Iran, UNHCR and the Government are exploring new initiatives with the aim of developing a sustainable livelihood strategy while they remain in the country. In Pakistan, the Government has allowed 1.7 million registered Afghans to remain in the country for at least three more years; at the same time, UNHCR is pursuing efforts to facilitate voluntary repatriation and invest in host communities.

52. Strategies for self-reliance and empowerment were also adopted in several other protracted and urban operations, including in Armenia, Bangladesh, Burundi, Egypt, India, Jordan, Malaysia, Senegal, eastern Sudan, the Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen and Zimbabwe. UNHCR welcomed the adoption of a Conclusion on protracted refugee situations by its Executive Committee in 2009. Taking on board many of the recommendations that came out of the 2008 High Commissioner's Dialogue on Protection Challenges, UNHCR has developed a Global Plan of Action on protracted situations, emphasizing the need to provide assistance and find durable solutions in a spirit of international collaboration, solidarity and burden sharing.

B. Voluntary repatriation

53. As already noted, the voluntary repatriation level for refugees was at its lowest in two decades. For the repatriation movements that did take place, the main countries of return in 2009 included Afghanistan (57,600), the Democratic Republic of the Congo (44,300), Iraq (38,000), Sudan (33,100), Burundi (32,400), and Rwanda (20,600). February 2009 marked the return from exile of the 300,000th Sudanese refugee since the start of UNHCR's repatriation operation in Southern Sudan in December 2005. During 2009, the Office and partners, in cooperation with the local authorities, continued efforts to meet the basic needs of returnees and support their reintegration, including in the areas of health and education.

54. The search for repatriation and reintegration opportunities continued in a number of other countries. For example, with support from UNHCR, more than 12,000 Mauritanian refugees returned home from Senegal in 2009. Since the end of the armed conflict in Sri Lanka in May 2009, UNHCR has been providing support to the Government in de-mining and providing assistance to ensure the sustainable reintegration of returnees. Progress in reconstruction and reconciliation remains key to resolving the displacement of Sri Lankans within and outside the country. In Iraq, UNHCR's activities formed part of the inter-agency Iraq Humanitarian Action Plan (IHAP), supporting the Iraqi Government in establishing the conditions to facilitate the return of refugees and IDPs.

C. Local integration

55. The degree of local integration achieved remained difficult to measure in quantitative terms. In those cases where refugees acquire citizenship through naturalization, data is often limited, as the countries concerned generally do not distinguish between refugees and others who have been naturalized. The United States of America granted citizenship to some 55,000 refugees in 2009. UNHCR was also informed of refugees being granted citizenship in Armenia, Belgium, Ireland and the Russian Federation in 2009.

56. In Africa, most notably in the United Republic of Tanzania, where 162,000 Burundian refugees living in exile since 1972 were granted citizenship, local integration has emerged as a viable solution for many refugees. Since the completion of the large-scale repatriation programme for Angolan refugees in 2007, UNHCR and the Governments of a number of asylum countries, including Namibia, have been looking into alternative arrangements for the remaining Angolan population. In West Africa, the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) recognized that refugees from Member States are entitled to work residency and other rights under the Protocol on the Free Movement of Persons, the Right of Residence and Establishment. UNHCR has assisted over 5,000 refugees from Sierra Leone to obtain documentation, access these rights and integrate locally. The Office has also supported self-reliance programmes for Liberian and Sierra Leonean refugees in the region, including in agriculture and vocational training.

D. Resettlement

57. UNHCR estimated the global resettlement needs in 2009 at about 747,000 persons, including populations for whom resettlement is envisioned over a period of several years. This included some 200,000 persons for whom resettlement is a pressing need, but available resettlement places have not kept pace with the growing needs. In 2010, with approximately 80,000 slots available, including one-time allocations by some States in response to the resettlement needs of Iraqi refugees, only about 40 per cent of the identified resettlement needs will be covered.

58. The Office's response to the gap between needs and places available has been threefold: (i) to encourage more countries to establish resettlement programmes or consider UNHCR submissions; (ii) to work with established resettlement countries to increase their intake of UNHCR-identified refugees; and (iii) to prioritize responses to resettlement needs and submissions, in light of the limited places available. One of UNHCR's Global Strategic Priorities for 2010-2011 foresees a 10 per cent increase in resettlement places. This objective will not be met however, unless States initiate new resettlement programmes or expand existing ones.

59. In 2009 and 2010, UNHCR's efforts to promote the strategic use of resettlement included ensuring that 10 per cent of its overall submissions were for women and girls at risk. In 2009, 34 operations exceeded 10 per cent of resettlement submissions for women at risk and 26 operations exceeded 15 per cent. The Office has also continued to draw the attention of resettlement countries to the needs of persons of concern in a number of priority situations in Africa, Asia, Europe, and the Middle East/North Africa regions. In addition, UNHCR has promoted multi-year resettlement programmes which provide greater predictability than annual initiatives and help implement comprehensive strategies.

VII. Partnerships and coordination

60. In 2009, UNHCR had almost 700 national partners and nearly 190 international partners worldwide. The Office remained committed to efforts aimed at improving the efficiency and coherence of humanitarian action, notably through the cluster approach to situations of internal displacement and the United Nations Delivering as One initiative. It continued to work closely with the IASC on an array of issues including strengthening the Humanitarian Coordinator system, preserving humanitarian space, and addressing the humanitarian consequences of climate change. Within the inter-agency context, in November 2009 UNHCR hosted the fourth meeting of the Inter-agency Support Group for the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, highlighting the need to include non-citizens in national assistance programmes for persons with disabilities.

61. Maintaining strong bilateral relations with key partner organizations remained a priority. During the first half of 2010, UNHCR and UNICEF agreed on a joint work plan to increase cooperation in the Field, including in the areas of child protection and emergency preparedness. While global food security continued to deteriorate, UNHCR and WFP collaborated to cover the food and nutrition needs of more than 2 million refugees and 10 million IDPs in 26 countries. In 2010, UNHCR and the International Labour Organization (ILO) set up an agreement to expand cooperation in the area of microfinance, with the aim of bolstering the self-reliance of displaced populations. Cooperation with IOM, one of UNHCR's most important partners, increased substantially in 2009, particularly in the areas of mixed migration and human trafficking.

62. As the single largest group of UNHCR's partners, NGOs continued to play an essential role in meeting the needs of populations of concern to the Office. In 2009, 27 per cent of UNHCR's total expenditure was channelled through 672 NGOs (159 international and 513 national). National NGOs are a major cornerstone of UNHCR's delivery capacity, providing vital local expertise and field presence. In June 2009, some 180 NGO representatives attended the UNHCR-NGO Annual Consultations, providing important input into the Office's new urban refugee policy. The 2010 Consultations held in early July, put specific focus on the particular contribution made by local NGOs in enabling UNHCR to carry out its mandate. Over 200 organizations were represented this year, half of which were national partners.

63. Regional efforts aimed at strengthening partnerships and coordination made noticeable progress during the reporting period. In the Middle East, UNHCR worked to develop its partnerships with Governments and organizations. In June 2009, UNHCR and the Organization of the Islamic Conference published a joint study in an effort to generate a better understanding of the natural compatibility between concepts of international refugee law and Islamic sharia law. In Europe, UNHCR worked to support the development of a Common European Asylum System, in order to harmonize EU legal standards with international norms and promote consistency in practice. Together with the Organization of American States, the Office was involved in a number of joint initiatives in the Americas region including an Inter-American Course on International Law, a Regional Conference on Refugee Protection and International Migration, and the development of Regional Guidelines for Assistance to Unaccompanied Minors in Cases of Repatriation. In Africa, in 2009 UNHCR established its Representation to the African Union and the Economic Commission for Africa, which played an active role in supporting the adoption of the African Union Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa. Cooperation with civil society representatives and countries in the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) paved the way for consultations in 2010 on access to asylum and refugee protection, particularly in the context of broader migration movements. In Central Asia, UNHCR strengthened its partnership with OSCE, including on the issue of statelessness and in relation to the training of senior border managers.

64. In 2009, UNHCR focused on reinforcing its key corporate partnerships, which not only bring in financial support but also include contributions of expertise, goods and media space. In particular, the Office deepened its collaboration with key partners in its Council of Business Leaders, including Manpower, Microsoft, Nike, PricewaterhouseCoopers, and WPP. UNHCR offices and associations around the globe are also developing partnerships at the national level.

65. In addition to corporate partnerships, UNHCR's relationships with major charitable foundations, such as the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, the United Nations Foundation, the Jolie-Pitt Foundation, and the Howard G. Buffet Foundation, as well as with the Office's Goodwill Ambassadors, brought about important contributions and material support, and played a critical role in terms of advocacy.

VIII. Financial management and oversight of programmes

A. Financial management

66. The total requirements for 2009 amounted to $2,293.4 million, comprising $1,292.6 million under the Annual Programme Budget and $1,000.8 million for 29 Supplementary Programme Budgets. International support for UNHCR's activities was unprecedented in 2009, with income exceeding $1,715 million in voluntary contributions, including more than $50 million from the private sector. This represented an increase of $117.5 million when compared with 2008. It allowed the Office to provide uninterrupted services to ongoing operations and to respond quickly and effectively to new emergencies worldwide.

67. As mentioned earlier, starting with the 2010-2011 budget cycle, UNHCR has introduced a new budget structure, in line with its move to results-based management. The 2010-2011 biennial budget was drawn up on the basis of a comprehensive assessment of the needs of persons of concern to the Office. The results were then re-examined under a prioritization process and reflected in the new four-pillar structure. This new budgetary process is supported by the Focus management support software system.

68. By mid-year, UNHCR's total Annual Budget for 2010 amounted to $3.134 billion, comprising $3.007 billion under the Annual Budget approved by the Executive Committee at its sixtieth session and an increase of $127.4 million for seven supplementary budgets created since January 2010 for new emergency interventions in the Congo, the Central African Republic, Haiti, Yemen, Kenya, Pakistan and Somalia. Over 48 donors pledged $477.5 million to UNHCR's Programme for 2010 before or during the Pledging Conference in December 2009. By mid-year, UNHCR had received a total of $1,297.2 billion in voluntary contributions. At that point it was estimated that income towards the Annual Budget and the supplementary budgets would reach approximately $1.654 billion, leaving a combined funding shortfall of some $1.269.5 billion at the end of the year.

69. UNHCR continued to explore options for funding its end-of-service and post-retirement liabilities, including after-service health insurance (ASHI), following closely the discussions in the United Nations General Assembly on the development of a system-wide approach. The Office continues to work towards becoming fully compliant with United Nations system-wide financial and accounting standards, notably the International Public Sector Accounting Standards (IPSAS), and the United Nations Harmonized Financial Regulations and Rules.

70. The entire organization is continuing to adjust to a new way of functioning, in line with the reform process and developments in the financial management system. It has been a daunting undertaking to introduce these new financial planning and budgeting systems all at one time, and this will continue to require perseverance and patience. UNHCR remains committed to working through these challenges and counts on Member States and its many other partners to support its efforts to become a more agile, accountable and results-oriented organization.

B. Oversight and audit

1. UNHCR audit service

71. The United Nations Office of Internal Oversight (OIOS) provides internal audit services to UNHCR. During the reporting period, 30 audit reports were produced compared to 21 in the prior period. The significant change from prior reporting periods was the increase in oversight of Headquarters activities, including arrangements for the delegation of authority to the Field, safety and security, and activities on behalf of internally displaced persons. The 30 audit reports generated 323 recommendations, in areas such as supply management, human resources management, programme and project management, financial management, information technology management, and safety and security.

2. Inspection and investigation

72. UNHCR's Inspector General established a "road map" in 2009 to strengthen the capacity of his office and implement the recommendations made by the Independent Panel Review of the Inspector General's Office (IGO) conducted in 2008 by the European Anti-Fraud Office (OLAF). As part of this process, the IGO was restructured in May 2010, including the upgrading of the former Inspection and Investigation Sections to Services, bringing them into line with other oversight entities in UNHCR.

73. Between January 2009 and May 2010, the IGO received 1210 complaints and opened up 145 investigations into alleged misconduct. The sharp increase in the number of complaints as compared to previous periods can be attributed to the establishment, in January 2009, of an on-line complaints mechanism to facilitate the reporting of possible misconduct, notably by persons of concern to UNHCR. The predominant types of situation investigated were harassment, abuse of authority and discrimination. During this period, the IGO carried out 19 standard inspections, two compliance missions and one ad hoc inquiry. The high rate of compliance with IGO recommendations registered in 2009 was maintained, with 90 per cent either implemented or underway. The remaining 10 per cent could not be implemented due to changed circumstances since the inspection. The ad hoc inquiry carried out in October 2009 was related to the violent attacks which led to the death of three UNHCR staff members in Pakistan.

74. In order to improve the delivery of the inspection function, the IGO has introduced a revised 2010 strategy, which includes: a) improving the annual inspection planning process through an increased risk-based approach in the selection of standard inspections; b) creating a predictable inspection roster for the three functional areas covered by standard inspections; c) narrowing the scope of standard inspections by limiting them to the examination of management aspects; and d) developing and updating inspection tools.

IX. Conclusion

75. Forced displacement, statelessness and complex migratory movements will remain prominent global issues for the foreseeable future. The 60th anniversary of the establishment of the Office at the end of 2010, as well as the 60th anniversary of the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and the 50th anniversary of the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness in 2011, provide an opportunity to reinforce the core principles and values of the existing consensus regarding the protection of those who have been forced from their homes and stateless populations. At the same time, these milestones should give space for reflection on how to create a new dynamic for dealing with protection issues that do not fall within the ambit of the 1951 Convention. Above all, it is an occasion to encourage States to pledge concrete actions on behalf of populations of concern. Going forward, UNHCR will continue to advocate for the preservation and expansion of humanitarian and asylum space; to strengthen and build upon its partnerships; to reinforce its protection and emergency response capacities; and to pursue lasting solutions for the people it cares for.

Notes to Table 1 (June 2010)

The data are generally provided by Governments, based on their own definitions and methods of data collection.

A dash (-) indicates that the value is zero, not available or not applicable.

¹ Country or territory of asylum or residence.

² Persons recognized as refugees under the 1951 UN Convention/1967 Protocol, the 1969 OAU Convention, in accordance with the UNHCR Statute, persons granted a complementary form of protection and those granted temporary protection. In the absence of Government figures, UNHCR has estimated the refugee population in 24 industrialized countries based on 10 years of individual refugee recognition.

³ This category is descriptive in nature and includes groups of persons who are outside their country or territory of origin and who face protection risks similar to those of refugees, but for whom refugee status has, for practical or other reasons, not been ascertained.

⁴ Persons whose application for asylum or refugee status is pending at any stage in the asylum procedure.

⁵ Refugees who have returned to their place of origin during the calendar year. Source: country of origin and asylum.

⁶ Persons who are displaced within their country and to whom UNHCR extends protection and/or assistance. It also includes people in IDP-like situations. This category is descriptive in nature and includes groups of persons who are inside their country of nationality or habitual residence and who face protection risks similar to those of IDPs but who, for practical or other reasons, could not be reported as such.

⁷ IDPs protected/assisted by UNHCR who have returned to their place of origin during the calendar year.

⁸ Refers to persons who are not considered nationals by any State under the operation of its laws.

⁹ Refers to individuals who do not necessarily fall directly into any of the other groups but to whom UNHCR may extend its protection and/or assistance services. These activities might be based on humanitarian or other special grounds.

¹⁰ According to the Government of Algeria, there are an estimated 165,000 Sahrawi refugees in the Tindouf camps.

¹¹ The 300,000 Vietnamese refugees are well integrated and in practice receive protection from the Government of China.

¹² Refugee figures for Iraqis in Jordan and the Syrian Arab Republic are Government estimates.

¹³ According to UNHCR, and based on lists provided by refugee communities in Malaysia, there are 20,000 unregistered asylum-seekers in Malaysia who share the same profile as the current population of asylum-seekers and refugees and who are being progressively registered and having their refugee status determined.

¹⁵ Asylum-seekers (pending cases) refers to an estimated 171,700 undecided cases at first instance at the end of 2009 and 138,100 undecided cases at the end of 2008 (no update available).

¹⁶ The IDP figure at the end of 2009 represents the remaining IDP population in camps and transit sites. They remain of concern to UNHCR together with the 408,000 who have already returned to their villages.
