The screenshot shows the UN Women website interface. At the top left is the UN Women logo and the text 'Virtual Knowledge Centre to End Violence against Women and Girls'. To the right, it says 'available in' with buttons for 'English', 'Español', and 'Français'. Below this is a navigation menu with 'Home', 'About', 'Resources -', 'Calendar', and 'Need Help?'. A search bar labeled 'Search content' is on the right. The main content area has a breadcrumb trail: 'Home / Security / Steps for conducting interviews'. On the left is a sidebar with a 'Security' category and a list of six items: '1. Introduction and Key Points', '2. Guiding Principles', '3. Planning and Design', '4. Programme Implementation', '5. Programme Monitoring and Evaluation', and '6. References'. The main article title is 'Steps for conducting interviews', with a sub-header 'Last edited: December 30, 2011'. Below the title, it says 'This content is available in' with buttons for 'English', 'Español', and 'Français', and an 'Options' button. The article text begins with 'General steps for conducting interviews with survivors include:' followed by a sub-section 'Planning and preparation'. Two bullet points are visible: 'Choose an appropriate location: When possible, the survivor should decide whether she is comfortable speaking in the police facility, or would prefer being another location (such as her home-if safe, a hospital, crisis centre or other support facility). For interviews in police facilities, a private space away from the perpetrator should be used. An interrogation room should not be used, since the woman or girl is the victim.' and 'Determine if others will be present: A trained officer (preferably a woman, although this may vary depending on the context) should conduct the interview. With agreement from the survivor, the interviewing officer may be accompanied by an additional officer and support person for the woman or girl.'
