Four years ago, UNHCR decided to bring the fight against sexual exploitation and abuse and sexual harassment together as one effort, with dedicated capacity and a holistic approach. What have we collectively achieved? Has this approach been successful? What are the challenges that remain? Have we found a “silver bullet” to eradicate sexual misconduct from our organization and the aid sector? UNHCR’s Deputy High Commissioner and four practitioners will examine these questions and delve into ways of tackling sexual misconduct within their respective areas of expertise – adopting a victim-centred approach, mainstreaming in emergencies, localizing aid, and changing our organizational culture. An exhibition highlighting the voices of victims will be on display.
