Annex I

Chairperson's summary of the general debate

The Chairperson summarized the general debate of the sixty-sixth session of the Executive Committee as follows:

“The High Commissioner opened the general debate by noting the significant increase in the numbers of displaced persons during his tenure – from 38 million in 2005 to over 60 million in 2015. He underscored occasions for progress, in spite of the succession of emergencies and sobering gaps in funding. About 125 delegations contributed to our debate, sharing your experiences, analyses and recommendations. This compares to some 80 delegations who took the floor in 2014.

Many of you recalled that more people are displaced today than at any time since the World War II era, with their ever increasing numbers compounded by the dwindling availability of durable solutions. The “mega-crises” in the Syrian Arab Republic and Iraq featured heavily in our discussions, although you cautioned us not to forget protracted situations such as Afghanistan and Somalia. You welcomed the high-level segment on the Afghan refugee situation in this respect. The situation in Europe was also highlighted, as you encouraged European States to strengthen their common response.

You echoed the High Commissioner's concerns that the humanitarian system is “financially broke”, while honouring the generosity of donors. Particular attention was drawn to the decreasing funding for situations in Africa. You issued strong appeals for donors to increase their contributions, including through unearmarked funding, as well as for efforts to attract new donor countries and the private sector. You joined the High Commissioner's call to rethink the financing of humanitarian operations; in particular, the need to strengthen the link between humanitarian and development interventions.

An overarching theme of the general debate was our collective responsibility to ensure that international protection is provided to those who need it. Many of you remembered times when your own citizens benefitted from asylum and expressed profound gratitude to host States, particularly those who host large numbers at great cost. You urged the international community to match the solidarity, hospitality and compassion of host communities with international burden-sharing. As one delegation reminded us, no country can face the challenges of dealing with large numbers of arrivals on their own.

Many of you encouraged States to maintain more open borders, and expressed support for UNHCR's work on alternatives to detention. Efforts to prevent and improve responses to sexual and gender-based violence were highlighted. In addition, you drew attention to comprehensive plans to address mixed movements, as well as human trafficking and smuggling, with particular mention of the dangerous maritime routes that are claiming so many lives. I was heartened to hear many States report progress in developing or implementing regional protection frameworks, notably the Brazil Plan of Action, as well as efforts to prevent and reduce statelessness. It is also encouraging that several States have strengthened their asylum procedures and laws, improved reception arrangements, and begun to issue machine-readable convention travel documents. UNHCR's efforts to foster tolerance and respect for diversity were welcomed, especially in light of the human consequences of discrimination and xenophobia.

We all share the High Commissioner's preoccupation with the growing elusiveness of durable solutions. The increase in resettlement places by some States was acknowledged as an important manifestation of global participation in resolving refugee challenges, and further efforts on resettlement were called for. We also heard about some of your generous local integration policies; and many delegations welcomed cooperative arrangements to facilitate voluntary return and reintegration. Nonetheless, more remains to be done to achieve solutions, which present both political and developmental challenges. Particular mention was made of the importance of targeted initiatives, such as the “Solutions strategy for Afghan refugees to support voluntary repatriation, sustainable reintegration and assistance to host countries” and the “High Commissioner’s global initiative on Somali refugees”, which require the urgent attention and support of the international community. Pending the availability of durable solutions, you have emphasized efforts to strengthen the resilience of refugees and their host communities, including through education, self-reliance and cash-based assistance. Several delegations noted that they include refugees in national education and health systems, as well as in national development plans. As one delegation stated, refugees can contribute to economic and social development in their countries of asylum if given the opportunity. They can be opportunities rather than burdens.

We were reminded of the need to respond to the causes of humanitarian crises, not just their consequences. You widely welcomed the theme of root causes for this year’s High Commissioner’s Dialogue on Protection Challenges. As we often affirm, solutions to humanitarian crises are necessarily political. The international community must encourage dialogue to resolve disputes through non-violent means, develop economies and build lasting and enduring peace. Some of you recalled that the causes of migration and displacement include not only violence, persecution, discrimination or other human rights violations, but also a lack of opportunities for employment and education, or hope for improving one’s quality of life.

Echoing the High Commissioner, you recalled that humanitarian problems are too complicated and long-term to be addressed by the humanitarian sector alone. You made clear that global mobility belongs at the heart of the international community’s agenda, including development agendas such as the Sustainable Development Goals. The World Humanitarian Summit was mentioned by many delegations, noting that UNHCR’s protection- and rights-based approach should serve as a model for humanitarian action. Equally, displacement must figure in discussions on climate change, and the Nansen Initiative provides an important contribution in that regard.

The High Commissioner noted in his remarks the attempts to dispute the validity of the 1951 Convention or to dilute UNHCR’s accountability for protecting refugees. It was therefore heartening to hear so many of you reaffirm your common commitment to the mandate and values of the Office. UNHCR must indeed remain “front and centre” in global efforts to protect the world’s most vulnerable people. You urged UNHCR to continue to enhance cooperation, coordination and strategic partnerships.

You reminded us that refugees are simply ordinary people living through extraordinary times. Our collective response to refugees can and should reflect this fact; all the more so as basic humanitarian values, including the principles of non-refoulement and assistance to those in need, span all cultures and all religions. As the High Commissioner stated: “The acts of kindness of millions of individuals in host communities across the world continue to show us, day after day, that tolerance and solidarity run deeply in the heart of humanity.” Let us continue to build on this tolerance and solidarity to ensure that the displaced - and those who host them - receive the support that they require in these turbulent times.

I join you in expressing my appreciation for the High Commissioner’s leadership and vision over the past decade, including his commitment to developing effective and innovative ways of delivering protection and assistance. He will be hard to replace and will be deeply missed by all of us.

Thank you.”

Annex II

Statement of the Executive Committee on the Afghan refugee situation

At the end of the high-level segment on the Afghan refugee situation, the Executive Committee adopted a statement as follows:

“We, Member States of the Executive Committee of the High Commissioner’s Programme, on the occasion of a high-level segment on the Afghan refugee situation, wish to emphasize the need to resolutely address one of the longest protracted refugee situations. Despite the multitude of complex humanitarian crises facing the international community today, it is imperative that all efforts be made to find and implement solutions for Afghan refugees, who have sought refuge outside their country for over 35 years, in light of the renewed dialogue and partnership among governments in the region and commitment of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan to support phased and voluntary return and reintegration.

We are deeply grateful for the video presentation by the President of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan and for the presentations by the ministers of the Islamic Republics of Iran and Pakistan. Despite the voluntary return of 5.8 million Afghan refugees since 2002, there remain more than 2.6 million Afghan refugees in the neighbouring countries of the Islamic Republics of Iran and Pakistan.

The renewed commitment of the Afghan Government of National Unity in making voluntary repatriation and reintegration of its citizens among its highest national priorities presents a unique opportunity to address this protracted situation. While international support has been generous, solutions for the returnees and remaining Afghan refugees will be elusive without lasting peace, security, and development. Returning refugees are vital to foster nation building and the reconstruction of their country, for which a conducive environment needs to be created. The voluntary return of Afghan refugees in safety and dignity should be facilitated along with their sustainable reintegration. We, therefore, appreciate the commitment by the Government of Afghanistan to include them in the national development planning and prioritization processes.

We highly commend the exemplary generosity and hospitality of the people and Governments of the Islamic Republics of Iran and Pakistan in hosting Afghan refugees. We recognize the profound impact of the protracted refugee situation on host communities, economies, services, infrastructure, environment and security. Voluntary repatriation and sustainable reintegration may pose specific challenges such as access to land, livelihood opportunities and provision of basic amenities for which the international community must play its due role and provide urgently needed assistance and financial support.

We reaffirm our support for the Solutions Strategy for the Afghan Refugees to Support Voluntary Repatriation, Sustainable Reintegration and Assistance to Host Countries (SSAR), endorsed by the international community in 2012, which presents the framework to identify and implement lasting solutions for Afghan refugees in the region. We are strongly encouraged by the aligning of national plans for Afghan refugees, prioritising empowerment of women and youth, by the Islamic Republics of Afghanistan, Iran and Pakistan, reflecting close dialogue and partnership.

We reaffirm the principles of international solidarity, responsibility and burden sharing and partnership, and are grateful for the commitments expressed by Member States, including resettlement countries, and the affirmations of support to the country of origin, the host countries and communities, UNHCR, other UN and relevant humanitarian and development actors and civil society working on behalf of Afghan refugees.

We call upon the international community to:

- Continue to equitably respect the principles of voluntary return in conditions of safety and dignity, recognizing that immediate return may not be possible to all parts of the country in light of ongoing insecurity affecting conditions for sustainable reintegration. The voluntary return and sustainable reintegration of the Afghan refugee population is one of the important elements to the overall stability and sustainable development of Afghanistan and the region;
- Support the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan in its commitment to create the necessary conditions for voluntary repatriation and sustainable reintegration in the country with emphasis on youth empowerment, education, livelihoods, social protection and infrastructure;
- Advocate inclusion into the Government of Afghanistan's development planning, the needs of all displaced Afghans, including refugees currently in neighbouring countries and outside the region;
- Implement lasting solutions for Afghan refugees within the framework of the SSAR through supporting concrete initiatives in the respective national project portfolios, and support the Government of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan to implement the Enhanced Voluntary Return and Reintegration Package for Afghan Refugees (EVRPP) as an innovative way to enhance sustainable return and reintegration;
- Support the mutually aligned policies, strategies and plans of the Islamic Republics of Afghanistan, Pakistan and Iran on voluntary repatriation and reintegration in the country of origin, as well as assistance and continued protection for refugees in host countries;
- Urge donors, development and humanitarian actors, UN agencies, NGOs and civil society to render their unequivocal support to enhancing reintegration and absorption capacity in the areas of return in Afghanistan, to promote broadening of the donor base, as well as to support refugees directly to improve their living conditions and host communities in the Islamic Republics of Iran and Pakistan;
- Promote the dialogue with the Islamic Republics of Afghanistan, Iran and Pakistan and UNHCR, as well as within the wider international community, to facilitate early voluntary return of Afghan refugees and their temporary management in host countries as part of Solutions Strategy for Afghan Refugees (SSAR); and
- In the spirit of solidarity, open channels for solutions in third countries such as legal migration, enhanced resettlement and family reunification opportunities in third countries.

We express our gratitude to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for supporting the organization of the high-level segment on the Afghan refugee situation and reiterate the key role of UNHCR in this situation.”
