The Central African Republic is one of the world's most neglected crises. Six years of fighting have left over 1.2 million persons displaced both inside and outside the country. The peace agreement signed between the government and belligerent factions in addition to the new National Strategy on Durable Solutions for IDPs and Refugees who have returned to the Central African Republic have brought new hope. This side event, which is organized by ECHO and UNHCR, will review humanitarian needs in the country and discuss opportunities for solutions to displacement in the context of the new national strategy, the humanitarian-development-peace nexus, and the Global Compact on Refugees.
